

Tropical Heat (The Fred Carver Mysteries)

Forced into early retirement by a bullet to the knee, ex-cop Fred Carver undertakes a missing persons case that quickly places him in mortal danger. When the criminals bullet shattered his knee, Fred Carver's colleagues called him lucky. Between his pension and the insurance check, they said, he had a nice, easy retirement to look forward to. But Fred Carver would rather have his knee. His career finished, his marriage over, he takes a halfhearted stab at private detective work, and is already sick of it by the time he meets Edwina Talbot, a beautiful woman who wants him to find her dead lover. Of course, Edwina doesn't believe her lover is actually dead. Every piece of evidence at the crime scene pointed to suicide, but as far as she's concerned her man is just missing and Fred Carver is going to bring him back. Carver wants nothing to do with it, but he can't say no to a little adventure. Some men just aren't built for taking it easy.
